Okay. Reserve your rights.

For the record, Cyberlux has not "paid in full", and they've objected to the disbursement of funds anyways, so the receivership remains in place. The earliest hearing to terminate is September or October of 2025. Now they've appealed, so the trial court can't even set a hearing to terminate the receivership until the appeal is dealt with.

I interpret your email as instructing me to proceed with the settlement without Legalist participating. Be well.

Warmly,

Robert Berleth

Robert,

As Legalist is not a party to the matter, we are not provided with updates from the Court. And Cyberlux has not told us anything about a settlement conference. Our understanding based on the last hearing we attended on June 12 is that the judgment has been satisfied in full based on Legalist wiring you the attached judgment amount. Cyberlux indicated at the hearing that they plan to challenge the judgment and fee amount, which is their prerogative. Legalist is not challenging anything—they simply wanted to make the payment to ensure that sufficient funds were in place to satisfy the judgment, terminate the receivership, and get everyone paid. If the landscape has changed and additional funds are in play to pay other creditors, please let us know. Legalist reserves all rights to seek funds to which it is legally entitled.

Thanks,
-Austin

You don't often get email from rberleth@berlethlaw.com. Learn why this is important

But you also haven't asked me to collect the funds for legalist or even told me how much is owed. I'll take your lack of action and communication as a "no".

I understand legalist and cyberlux are trying to keep the receiver's fees down. Smart. Best of luck in your collection efforts and be well.

Jeff,

Is Legalist simply going to skip participating in settlement conference, and seek remedy for collecting on Cyberlux outside the receivership?
